WOODEN ARCHITECTURE OF PODLASKIE

TITBIT

A borderland region from time immemorial, Podlaskie Voivodship of today is a cultural, ethnic and religious mosaic proud of its Polish, Belarusian, Lithuanian, Jewish, Russian, German, Ukrainian and Tatar inhabitants, whether Catholic, Orthodox, Uniate, Evangelical or Muslim. Specific cultural landscape, ethnic and religious diversity, richness of rites and traditions are the most characteristic features of this region, visible also in its architecture, including the wooden rural architecture.

The typical wooden rural architecture of Podlaskie makes many villages look like "live" open-air museums. Perfectly preserved, dense complexes of old wooden farm buildings in north-eastern Poland are a rarity on European scale. The region's small towns and villages feature interesting wooden public buildings, such as offices, schools, railway stations. Podlaskie's landscape is dotted with a number of wooden windmills, watermills, smithies, chapels, roadside crosses, traditional fencings.

The Białystok Countryside Museum (Branch of Podlaskie Museum), Museum of Agriculture in Ciechanowiec, Kurpie Open-air in Nowogród and Open-air in Puńsk display precious wooden rural buildings. These museums, as well as other institutions of this type (e.g. the Regional Museum in Lipsk), boast unique collections of folk culture.

The annual Best Preserved Monument of Rural Architecture Competition, held since 2005, helps preserve wooden architecture.
